A Saturday of fiscal signals and political friction across the hemisphere, as Brazil’s debt declined and Chile’s sweeping tax overhaul neared the finish line while Argentina’s inflation snapped its disinflation streak. Colombia’s contested transition deepened institutional uncertainty, and Mexico reshuffled its agriculture ministry in an otherwise quiet weekend.

SINCE YESTERDAY Brazil logged its first monthly public-debt decline of the year, a data point that briefly eases fiscal anxiety. Meanwhile, Argentina's June inflation rose to 4.6%, breaking a five-month streak of cooling prices and challenging Milei's stabilization narrative amid signals of possible U.S. support.
